

Greensburg: One Year Later

Greensburg: One Year Later

On May 4, 2007, an F-5 tornado - the most powerful tornado to hit the U.S. in eight years - devastated the community of Greensburg. When the storm cleared, a 1.7 mile wide path of destruction remained. The tornado had flattened 95 percent of the town's homes, businesses, schools and parks.

In the days and weeks that followed, Greensburg residents were joined by rescue workers and volunteers, television and radio crews, actors and actresses, and even the President of the United States. All came offering hope to the residents that their community would live on.

One year later, the media and President Bush have returned to see the progress the people of Greensburg have made. The community they find is one of hope, progress and determination. It is the result of countless hours of hard work made by the citizens of Greensburg. I have made several trips to Greensburg since the tornado and each time I am amazed to see a vibrant community and to hear the wonderful stories about what has been accomplished. I will continue doing all I can to help the people of Greensburg have a place to call home again.
